

Information for employers

Helping a bereaved parent return to work

Third edition, Sands 2013

© Sands 2013

No part of this booklet may be reproduced in whole or part, in any form or by any electronic or mechanical means without the prior written permission of Sands. All rights reserved.

Whilst every care is taken providing information, please note that it is of a general nature and that readers should seek professional or expert advice as appropriate to their specific circumstance. Sands does not accept any liability, including liability for any error or omission.

All information is correct at the time of going to print: July 2013.

Sands

3rd Floor
28 Portland Place
London, W1B 1LY

t: 020 7436 7940
e: info@uk-sands.org
w: www.uk-sands.org

Helpline 020 7436 5881 helpline@uk-sands.org

Sands message boards www.sandsforum.org

Sands publications 0845 6520 445 or order online at www.uk-sands.org

Registered as a charity in England and Wales (299679) and in Scotland (SC042789)

Text written and revised by Judith Schott and Alix Henley, 2013

We are grateful to the employers and parents who have contributed to this booklet.

Design and print by Hotrod and Mutual Media

“I was so scared of going back to work after my baby died. I had thought that the next time I went back it would be to show everyone my beautiful baby.

I didn’t know how my employer and my colleagues would react or how I would cope. I felt very vulnerable.” Mum

Contents

Part 1

Grief and the workplace 06

What to say and do 07

What may help 08

What may be unhelpful 08

Discussing entitlements and benefits, and planning their return to work 09

Explaining what has happened 09

Returning to work 10

Medical appointments 11

Difficult times at work 11

Photographs 12

Part 2

Entitlements and benefits for bereaved parents 13

If the baby was born dead before 24 completed weeks of pregnancy 14

If the baby was stillborn after 24 completed weeks of pregnancy OR if the baby was born alive at any stage of pregnancy and then died 15

| | |
|-------------------------------------|-----------|
| More information and support | 16 |
| How Sands can help | 17 |
| Sands support resources | 18 |
| Where to get more information | 19 |
| Useful addresses | 20 |
| Notes | 22 |

Stillbirths and neonatal deaths are far more common than most people think. Every day in the UK, 17 babies are either stillborn (born dead after 24 weeks of pregnancy) or die within the first few weeks of life. This figure does not include babies who die earlier in pregnancy.

Part 1 of this booklet describes how a bereaved parent may feel and what he or she may find helpful. Colleagues and managers may also find it useful to read this.

Part 2 summarises the entitlements of bereaved parents at work.

We hope you will find this booklet useful. Please feel free to contact Sands if you need more information or support.

Grief and the workplace

The death of a baby at any stage of pregnancy is devastating and is usually completely unexpected. A routine antenatal check-up may have shown that the baby's heart had stopped beating. The parents may have had to make the difficult decision to end the pregnancy because their baby had a serious abnormality.

Their baby may have died suddenly during labour. Or their baby may have been born alive but have been too ill or premature to survive. In every case the death of a baby is traumatic.

Following the death, the parents have to go home without the baby they love and have prepared for. They have to cope with telling family members and friends, decide about a post mortem, register the birth and death or the stillbirth, and plan a funeral for their baby. All these things are unimaginable to those who have not been through them.

The death of a baby at birth is also the loss of people's dreams, plans and hopes for the future. It seems to contradict the laws of nature. Bereaved parents, especially mothers, often see the death as their failure: they were not able to protect their baby. Partners may feel powerless and unable to help. Both parents' self-esteem and confidence may be badly damaged and they may feel very vulnerable. Many bereaved parents also feel isolated, cut off by their grief from the happy families they see around them.

At some point, most parents have to face the prospect of going back to work.

This may be the last thing they feel like doing. It may seem like a terrifying hurdle. While they have been living in a world of pain and sadness, other people's lives have gone on regardless. Most of their work colleagues will almost certainly have no idea what they are going through.

Because the death of a baby is often regarded as less significant than, for example, the death of an older child, many people underestimate the effect on the parents. They may expect them to “get over” the death of their baby in a few weeks or months and to “move on”. But the death of a baby is a major bereavement. Although the intensity of their grief may fade over time and they may learn to live with what has happened, both the baby’s mother and father are likely to be sad for a long time.

What to say and do

When you hear about the death of the baby, you may want to send a short note from yourself and/or colleagues, simply saying how sorry you are. If there is a funeral, you may want to send flowers or attend. Many families prefer to make a donation to a chosen charity instead of having flowers at a funeral. If work colleagues want to “do something” to express their sympathy, you may want to arrange a collection or fundraising activity in memory of the baby that has died.

Many people worry about saying the wrong thing to a bereaved parent. They may try to avoid them, or may speak to them but not mention the baby who has died. Although no one can take away the parents’ grief, simple acknowledgment of their loss may help them feel less isolated.

It is important not to try to provide false comfort, diminish the significance of their baby’s death, or try to “cheer up” a bereaved parent.

The box overleaf contains phrases that many parents have found helpful and also some to avoid.

What may help

- ▶ "I am so sorry about your loss."
- ▶ "I heard about your baby. I am so sorry. I don't know what to say."
- ▶ "Is there anything I can do to help?"

If the parents gave their baby a name, they will probably appreciate it if you use the name when you talk about him or her.

What may be unhelpful

- ▶ "It was fate. It was meant to be."
- ▶ "There was probably something wrong with the baby."
- ▶ "It was better that he/she died." (for example, if the baby was very ill)
- ▶ "At least you can have more children. You're still young."
- ▶ "At least you have other children."
- ▶ "It could have been worse - at least you never got to know him/her."
- ▶ "Time will heal."

Discussing entitlements and benefits, and planning their return to work

Grief and shock can make it hard for a bereaved employee to think clearly and be proactive. They may not feel able, for example, to get in touch with you to discuss their return to work, or to check how the death of their baby affects their entitlement to leave and benefits. It may be helpful to contact them and suggest a meeting or fix a time for a longer phone call. Part 2 of this booklet summarises entitlements for bereaved parents.

Some parents welcome the thought of the routine of work and a return to some kind of normality. For others the prospect is very daunting. In some cases an employee may ask to reduce their hours initially, or, if their job allows, to work from home. They have a legal right to have such requests considered fully and seriously.

Explaining what has happened

A bereaved employee may be worried about what to say to their colleagues when they return to work. You could suggest that they write a letter or an email explaining what has happened and saying, for example, when and how their baby died, the baby's name, weight and other details, and a simple statement about how the death has affected them and their family. This can ease the employee's first contact with colleagues and can make it easier for other people to be supportive. If the employee prefers, you could undertake to speak to their immediate colleagues and/or significant clients.

Returning to work

Grief is a very private and individual experience: each person reacts and deals with it differently. Some parents may want to talk about their baby at work; others will not. Men and women tend to express grief in different ways. Culture may also play a part: in some cultures open grieving is the norm; in others people are expected to hide their emotions and put on a brave face. An employee's response may also depend on whether they have come back to work soon after the death of their baby or have had quite a lot of time off.

Grief tends to come in waves, often unexpectedly. An employee may appear to be coping well and then suddenly find themselves in tears. This is the normal ebb and flow of grief. Sands receives many phone calls from people in tears at work. Sometimes a parent just needs to talk to someone who will listen, and can get back to work afterwards. Try to reassure them that it is all right to take a little time away from the immediate workplace. They may find it helpful to speak to a colleague, phone a family member, or phone our Helpline (see How Sands can help on page 17). If possible, make a phone available for them somewhere private.

Some temporary effects of profound grief include exhaustion, inability to sleep, and difficulty in concentrating or feeling motivated. If possible, try to welcome the employee back with the agreement that they will do "as good a job as they can" for the first few weeks. Simply recognising and acknowledging their situation can, in itself, ease some of the pressure and anxiety that many bereaved parents feel about being back at work.

Medical appointments

Parents often need to attend medical appointments after the death of a baby. The mother usually has a six-week follow-up appointment. Her partner may also want to attend. Both parents may have a hospital appointment to discuss post mortem results. Some may need to see a genetic counsellor to discuss risks in future pregnancies. If at all possible, they should be given leave to attend these important appointments.

Difficult times at work

The acute grief that follows the death of a baby may last for many weeks and months. At some point the intensity of the grief will fade, but an event or an anniversary or, for example, the news that a colleague is pregnant, can reawaken a parent's grief.

Certain dates, for example the baby's due date and the anniversary of the death, can be especially sad and difficult. Some parents may ask for a day off on these dates. Other days that celebrate parenthood, such as Mother's Day and Father's Day, as well as Christmas and other festivals, can be very hard.

If the mother becomes pregnant again, both parents are likely to feel heightened anxiety, stress and conflicting emotions. Other people may find this difficult to understand: they often assume that a bereaved parent must be happy to be having another baby. But a new baby will not replace the baby who has died, and many bereaved parents are hurt if other people assume that it could. Each baby is an individual with a permanent place in their hearts.

Many parents are also terrified that this baby will also die.

Photographs

For many bereaved parents, a photograph of their baby is their most precious possession which they may want to display on their desk or in their locker. Although most babies who have died look normal, some people, especially pregnant women and expectant fathers, may be distressed by being reminded that not all babies are born healthy and alive. It is worth bearing in mind that bereaved parents may be equally upset by seeing family photos with healthy babies on other people's desks or lockers. Although photographs can be a sensitive issue, it is important that people are allowed to display them.

Entitlements and benefits for bereaved parents

Entitlements and benefits are complicated and depend on different factors such as length of employment and level of earnings before the birth. They also change frequently.

For a downloadable booklet giving more details on up-to-date entitlements, go to the HMRC website: www.hmrc.gov.uk and search for the current version of the Employer Helpbook for Statutory Maternity Pay. (Also called Employer Helpbook E15).

The Money Advice Service has a leaflet on benefits specially for bereaved parents: Late miscarriage, stillbirth, neonatal death – A guide to the financial help available. A copy can be obtained from the Sands Shop or Helpline (see page 17).

If the baby was born dead before 24 completed weeks of pregnancy

The grief and shock of losing a baby after 14 or 16 weeks of pregnancy can be much the same as following a stillbirth. But for legal purposes, a loss at any stage before 24 completed weeks of pregnancy is called a miscarriage.

This can be very hard for parents who want their baby and their loss to be officially recognised. There is no entitlement to Maternity or Paternity Leave following a miscarriage.

A bereaved parent who is unable to go back to work for medical reasons qualifies for Sick Leave, provided they have a note from their GP. Sick Leave taken by a woman immediately after a miscarriage is likely to be “protected” in the same way as other pregnancy-related illness. (That is, she should not lose out because of her absence from work.) It is good employment practice to record this separately from other Sick Leave, in order to make sure that the woman cannot be regarded as having been treated unfavourably because of the miscarriage. However, if an absence continues for a long time, it may be arguable that it is no longer pregnancy-related. If a bereaved mother is normally entitled to sick pay from your organisation, she is also entitled to Sick Pay for pregnancy-related Sick Leave.

If an employee is not sick but needs time off, consider allowing them Compassionate Leave or Time Off for Dependants (TOFD). Alternatively, they can ask for paid or unpaid leave.

If the baby was stillborn after 24 completed weeks of pregnancy OR if the baby was born alive at any stage of pregnancy and then died

The mother is entitled to 52 weeks' Maternity Leave. She should normally have informed your organisation that she was pregnant before the 24th completed week of her pregnancy. If her baby was born alive before 24 completed weeks and then died, she is still entitled to 52 weeks' Maternity Leave even if she had not yet informed your organisation.

The mother may also be entitled to Statutory Maternity Pay (SMP), depending on her level of earnings.

The father or partner may be entitled to one or two consecutive weeks' Paternity Leave, depending on how long he has worked for your organisation. He should normally have informed your organisation that his partner was pregnant before the 24th completed week of her pregnancy. If the baby was born alive before 24 completed weeks and then died, he is still entitled to Paternity Leave even if he had not yet informed your organisation.

The father may also be entitled to Statutory Paternity Pay (SPP), depending on his level of earnings and other factors.

A mother's female partner has the same entitlements to leave and pay as a father.

Both parents If a bereaved parent who is not on Maternity or Paternity Leave is unable to return to work for medical reasons, they qualify for Sick Leave, provided they have a note from their GP. If an employee is not sick but needs time off, consider allowing them Compassionate Leave or Time Off for Dependents (TOFD). Alternatively, they can ask for paid or unpaid leave.

More information and support

Sands has a wide range of support services available for parents, other members of the family, grandparents, and other children. Many people may be touched by a baby's death including friends, colleagues and health care staff, all are welcome to contact us for support and information.

The following pages include further details of Sands support resources and contact details of other charities and organisations that may be helpful to you and the baby's parents following the death of a baby.

If appropriate, you may want to suggest that the employee seeks additional support from their doctor or health visitor, or from your organisation's medical services.

You or they may also want to contact Sands. For contact details please see page 17.

How Sands can help

Sands is a national charity offering emotional support and practical help when a baby dies during pregnancy, at birth or shortly afterwards.

17 babies are stillborn or die shortly after birth every day in the UK and each year we support thousands of families whose babies have died.

At Sands there are people who understand what it's like, because many of us have been through this devastating experience ourselves.

You may not want anything from us right away. We are here to help whenever it is needed, that may be now or in a few weeks, months or even years.

As well as supporting mothers, fathers and same sex partners, we are also here to help other members of the family, especially grandparents and other children. Many people may be touched by a baby's death, including friends, colleagues and health care staff.

All are welcome to contact us for support and information.

| | |
|--|---|
| Do you want to speak to someone on our helpline? | 020 7436 5881 |
| Do you want to email us for support? | helpline@uk-sands.org |
| Do you want to connect with others whose baby has died? | www.sandsforum.org |
| Do you want to find out about a Sands group local to you? | helpline@uk-sands.org |
| Do you want information and books to read? | www.uk-sands.org |
| Do you want to email us for general information? | info@uk-sands.org |
| Do you want to make a donation or fundraise? | fundraising@uk-sands.org |
| Do you want to talk to someone in Sands head office? | 020 7436 7940 |
| Do you want to write to us? | Sands, 3rd Floor, 28 Portland Place, London, W1B 1LY |

Sands support resources

If you would like more information on any of the subjects we have mentioned, please see our current list of Sands booklets below.

You can order these from our website or by phone, as well as our Always Loved Never Forgotten memory boxes, our books for children and other resources.

Sands booklets

Another pregnancy – for parents whose baby has died

Deciding about a post mortem - Information for parents

For family and friends: how you can help

Information and support for grandparents

Information for employers

Mainly for fathers

Returning to work after the death of your baby

Sands support services

Saying goodbye to your baby

Sexual relationships after the death of your baby

Supporting children when a baby has died

When a baby dies before labour begins

To order online please go to www.uk-sands.org/Shop

Where to get more information

Money Advice Service

For an up-to-date summary of entitlements, go to:

www.moneyadviceservice.org.uk.

In the “Search this site” box enter one of the following phrases:

“Late miscarriage / Stillborn / Died shortly after birth”

Government websites

These UK government websites contain more detailed information about all the different benefits to which parents may be entitled and how to claim them, as well as links to downloadable claim forms, email addresses, telephone numbers etc.

England, Wales, Scotland: www.gov.uk Select Benefits

Northern Ireland: www.nidirect.gov.uk Select Money, tax and benefits

Then enter what you are looking for into the search box at the top of the page and click on Go.

For most benefits parents can also call or visit their local Job Centre or JobCentre Plus (in Northern Ireland: Jobs and Benefits Office, or Social Security Office).

For more help and advice on employment or financial issues, parents can also contact:

Working Families

www.workingfamilies.org.uk

A campaigning charity which supports and gives a voice to working parents. Gives financial and other advice over the phone or by email.

Helpline: 0800 013 0313

Email: advice@workingfamilies.org.uk

Useful addresses

Other charities that can offer support

Bliss - the special care baby charity

www.bliss.org.uk

Support, advice and information for families of babies in intensive care and special care, including bereaved families.

Helpline: 0500 618 140 Email: hello@bliss.org.uk

Child Bereavement UK

www.childbereavement.org.uk

Supporting families when a child dies and when a child is bereaved.

Support and information: 01494 568900

Email: support@childbereavementuk.org

Miscarriage Association

www.miscarriageassociation.org.uk

Support and information for those affected by pregnancy loss.

Network of support groups and telephone contacts throughout the UK.

Helpline: 01924 200799 Email: info@miscarriageassociation.org.uk

TAMBA Bereavement Support Group

www.tamba-bsg.org.uk

Support for families who have lost one or more children from a multiple birth. (Part of the Twins and Multiple Births Association – TAMBA)

Helpline: 0800 138 0509 Email: Use the form on their website

Winston's Wish

www.winstonswish.org.uk

Help and support for bereaved children and young people up to the age of 18.

Helpline: 0845 203 0405 Email: info@winstonswish.org.uk

Notes

About Sands

Sands, the stillbirth and neonatal death charity, was founded in 1978 by a small group of bereaved parents devastated by the death of their babies, and by the total lack of acknowledgement and understanding of the significance and impact of their loss.

Since that time we have supported many thousands of families whose babies have died, offering emotional support, comfort and practical help. Sands today operates throughout the UK and focuses on three main areas of work:

We support anyone affected by the death of a baby

Bereavement support is at the core of everything we do. Some of the services that we offer include:

- ▶ Helpline for parents, families, carers and health professionals
- ▶ UK-wide network of support Groups with trained befrienders
- ▶ Online forum and message boards enabling bereaved families to connect with others
- ▶ Website and a wide range of leaflets, books and other resources.

We work in partnership with health professionals to try to ensure that bereaved parents and families receive the best possible care

We undertake a comprehensive programme of training, workshops and talks for health professionals based on the Sands Guidelines which give practical guidance on how to meet parents' needs and provide good bereavement care.

We promote and fund research that could help to reduce the loss of babies' lives

In spite of medical advances, the shocking reality is that each day in the UK there are eleven babies who are stillborn and six who die within the first 28 days of life. Through our Why17? campaign, we are raising vital funds for research, while challenging government to address these individual tragedies as a matter of urgency and priority.

We depend on the extraordinary energies of our supporters to raise the vital funds that we need to deliver the wide range of services that we offer.

If you would like any further information or support please contact us or visit our website.

Contact Sands:

3rd Floor, 28 Portland Place, London, W1B 1LY

t: 020 7436 7940

e: info@uk-sands.org

w. www.uk-sands.org

Support:

t: 020 7436 5881

e: helpline@uk-sands.org

Sands message boards:

www.sandsforum.org